

Aborigines Protection Association

1881 – c. 1897

Details

The Aborigines Protection Association was set up in 1881 to both control Aboriginal people and ‘protect’ them from the effects of white society. It was inspired by Christian missionary work conducted by Daniel Matthews at Maloga and Reverend J.B. Gribble at Warangesda and later expanded to include Brewarrina. In 1897 it was wound up and its properties were absorbed by the Aborigines Protection Board.

The Society was headed by Dr Arthur Renwick, of the Benevolent Society and State Children’s Relief Board and had the support of Premier Henry Parkes, but depended on private donations for survival. In 1883 the government established a separate organisation, the Aborigines Protection Board, which included MPs and the Police Commissioner, and was given power over lands reserved for Aboriginal people and the right to provide government aid.

The Aborigines Protection Association clashed with the Protection Board and struggled to fund its operations. By 1897 it had collapsed and its books, money and properties were transferred to the Protection Board. Its legacy was the stations, and the Warangesda Dormitory.

Gallery

The northern side of the former girls' dormitory [former Warangesda Station]

More info

Related Entries

Ran

- Warangesda Dormitory \(1893 - 1912\)
Date: 1893 - 1897

Related Organisations

- Aborigines Protection Board, State Government of New South Wales \(1883 - 1940\)
The Aborigines Protection Board was set up just after the Aborigines Protection Association and in 1897 took over the property of the Association.
Date: 1881 - 1897
- Brewarrina Aboriginal Station Dormitory \(c. 1897 - c. 1940\)

Resources

- Warangesda Aboriginal Mission and Station, Facebook Group, 2013
-

You can view this page online by visiting <https://www.findandconnect.gov.au/entity/aborigines-protection-association/>