

Hillside Home for Mothers and Babies

1913 – 1919

Details

Hillside Home for Mothers and Babies was located at the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children and was established by the State Children's Relief Board in 1913. In 1915, when the New South Wales Government resumed Randwick Asylum for use as accommodation for World War I soldiers, Hillside Home moved to Ormond House in Paddington.

Hillside Home for Mothers and Babies was opened in October 1913. It was one of a number of homes established by the Board under the Infant Protection Act 1904. It was intended to keep unmarried mothers together with their babies until the child was weaned, as the State Children's Relief Board was concerned about the very high rate of death amongst 'illegitimate' babies who were placed in babies' homes because their mothers had to support themselves.

The idea behind Hillside was to support mothers to breastfeed for an extended period. Once the baby was weaned the mother could try to find employment that allowed her to keep the child or the baby could be placed in the boarding out system (foster care).

Hillside Home for Mothers and Babies was closed in 1919 when Santa Marina opened, and the operations of Hillside were transferred there. The site of the Hillside Home was then used for the Hillside Training Home for Girls.
