

Norfolk Island Orphan School

1795 – 1814

Details

Norfolk Island Orphan School was established in 1795 by the Lieutenant-Governor Of Norfolk Island, Philip Gidley King. The Orphan School was a residential facility for female orphans who lived on the island and it was run by the Secretary of the Governor. Norfolk Island Orphan School closed in 1814 when the entire settlement on Norfolk Island was abandoned.

According to Ramsland (p.2) girls who were placed in Norfolk Island Orphan School had either lost their parents or had been deserted by them. In Governor King's opinion, these girls required a strict hand or eye over them. King continued to oversee the progress of the Orphan School once he left Norfolk Island in October 1796, informing the new Lieutenant-Governor of Norfolk Island that the girls should be taught handcraft professions.

More info

Related Entries

Run by

- Secretary to the Governor \(26 Jan 1788 - 1 Jan 1821\)

Resources

- Laurent, Nicola, The Starting Point, Find & Connect web resource blog, 14 August 2015
- Golding, Frank, Lost & Found: State Children in Victoria, Frank Golding: author, researcher, historian and consultant specialising in child welfare, 27 July 2017

You can view this page online by visiting <https://www.findandconnect.gov.au/entity/norfolk-island-orphan-school/>