

Northfield Consumptive Home

1931 – 1936

Details

The Northfield Consumptive Home was opened in 1931 at Northfield to replace the Adelaide Hospital's Consumptive Home on North Terrace. The Northfield Consumptive Home provided treatment to patients with advanced tuberculosis and cancer. These patients may have included children. It had beds for 112 patients. In 1936 the Northfield Consumptive Home was re-named the Morris Hospital.

The Northfield Consumptive Home was opened on 10 November 1931 to provide treatment to patients with advanced tuberculosis and cancer. It was built to replace the Adelaide Hospital's Consumptive Home on North Terrace that was described by the Premier of South Australia in 1929 as “a disgrace to Adelaide”.

The Northfield Consumptive Home was built on a portion of land formerly known as 'Conrad's Estate' at Northfield, adjacent to the Northfield Infectious Diseases Hospital and near the Northfield Mental Hospital. It comprised an administrative block, a nurses' block, three consumptive wards for 86 patients, and a cancer ward for 26 patients. Patients at the Home may have included children. In 1936, the Northfield Consumptive Home was re-named the Morris Hospital in honour of the late Dr B. H. Morris, Inspector General of Hospitals.

Gallery

New Consumptive Home

Description: This image was included in The Adelaide Chronicle on Saturday 13 April 1929. It includes a sketch of the Nurses Block of the proposed new building at Northfield Consumptive Home.

More info

Chronology

- Northfield Consumptive Home (1931 – 1936)
 - Morris Hospital (1936 - 1981)
 - Hampstead Rehabilitation Centre (1981 - current)

Resources

- Morris Hospital at Northfield, The Advertiser, 11 November 1936

Records

Records

- Record of patients - Northfield Consumptive Home, later Morris Hospital \(1934 - 1941\)
-

You can view this page online by visiting <https://www.findandconnect.gov.au/entity/northfield-consumptive-home/>