

Children's Psychiatric Service Launceston

1971 – 1990?

Other Names:

- Wellington Street Clinic
- Combined Children's Centre

Details

The Children's Psychiatric Service Launceston, run by the Mental Health Services Commission, opened in about 1971. It had a multidisciplinary team that used a community and family orientated approach to working with children. The Service, which became the Wellington Street Clinic, appears to have closed or been replaced in the late 1980s or early 1990s.

Members of the team visited Ashley Home for Boys.

In about 1975, the Service became the Wellington Street Clinic.

It began holding regular sessions on the north-west coast in 1984.

More info

Related Entries

Run by

- The Mental Health Services Commission \(1968 - 1989\)

Related Events

- Investigation of the care and treatment of "socially maladjusted teenage girls", Sub-Committee of the Tasmanian Branch of the Australian Institute of Welfare Officers \(c. 1975\)

Related Organisations

- Ashley Home for Boys \(1926 - 1999\)
Staff from the Children's Psychiatric Service visited Ashley Home for Boys.
- Combined Children's Centre \(1968 - current\)
The Children's Psychiatric Service Launceston worked in a similar way to the Combined Children's Centre in Hobart.