

Group Home

1970s –

Details

Group Home was a term used in the late 1970s to refer to a Home for children and young people who required 'therapeutic care'. Group homes could be either scattered (ie in the community) or clustered (located with other group Homes on a campus, usually where there had previously been a children's Home). This type of accommodation was later also known as a family or residential group Home.
